Many people have provided inspiration over the course of the last five years as I have undertaken this research. Some of them will know it, and some will not as it is through their writings that I have been inspired.

Four supervisors have been unfortunate enough to be inflicted with my supervision in this time, starting with the late Professor Graham Tate in 1992. Dr. Ernest Jordan has been a continual, if slightly erratic, source of encouragement and wisdom from the very start of this research. I owe much to his initial enthusiasm and his volleys of ideas. When Ernie left CityU, Dr Nabil Kamel very kindly took over my supervision at a critical moment as the case studies were about to get under way. His own training as an Engineer led him to guide me in a more systematic fashion than before, with the result that I approached the case studies with a more precise idea of what I was trying to do. Finally, Professor Doug Vogel has borne with me in the closing stages, providing much needed support and encouragement as the thesis was wound up.

Apart from these formal advisors, I owe much to colleagues past and present and perhaps future including (in no particular order) K.K. Wei, Bob Briggs, Gert-Jan de Vreede, Nereu (Ned) Kock, Roger Harris, Gregory James, Janice Burn, John Milton, Maris Martinsons, Nick Luker and the staff and research students (present and past) of the Dept of Information Systems at CityU.

There are also innumerable friends and colleagues who have encouraged me (with or without realising it) as I struggled along, including (again in no particular order) John Dockerill, Tim Boswood, Sea Ling, Tracy, Elza, Kitty, Keith, Johnny, Ping, Myrtle, Wing, Wing Wing and the IS Dept late night crew - Ada, Patrick and hundreds of final year BAIS students.

Colleagues, if I may refer to them as such, whom I have not met but whose works and deeds have inspired me include (with the same caveat) Geert Hofstede, Michael Harris Bond, Claude Lévi-Strauss, Philippe Descola, Thor Heyerdahl and Thuksey Rinpoche.

The participants in the case studies, some of whom are mentioned above.

Finally, my parents, who have seen little enough of me in the last five years (and who may see little more in the years to come), have supported my work from afar, curious perhaps about their wayward son and his habit of calling home at 2 in the morning!
